To Whom it May Concern:

I am emailing to voice my concerns over the Vivian Project. The technology that is going to be implemented to extract silica poses potential risks to groundwater in my home community in Emerson Franklin, where many of my family members live. I am opposed to this method of mining even though it may be billed as lower impact. The risks to drinking water are too great. In the face of climate change and to protect the land for present and future generations, extractive practices should be slowing down or halting entirely, rather than being developed and I ask that this project does not move forward.

Chelsea McClelland.
