Hello,

I'm a resident of southern Manitoba, and have been my whole life. There's a handful of things I find comfortable or familiar about it, and one of those is the relatively low level of extraction-based pollution we have to deal with. Hearing about the government's intention to start pumping our ground for silica using what, according to my sources, is a relatively new and untested "greener" extraction format? That concerns me. Please do not risk a vitally important resource, like the clean drinking water of tens of thousands of people, for fucking profit. I'm sick of it, and I'm not the only one.
